Steady growth

Wethersfield Academy for the Arts is enjoying increased interest

by Mark Jahne
Editor

When the Wethersfield Academy for the Arts opened in 2007 there was no way to tell how popular its offerings might become. The founders were confident, but it needed to pass the test of time.

Fast forward to 2017. The arts venue housed in a refurbished barn at the north end of Hartford Avenue is receiving critical acclaim from the Hartford area and beyond.

More people are attending its lectures and signing up for its classes. Membership is steadily growing.

The nonprofit organization has resided in the barn since 2011. Betty Standish, chairman of its board of directors, said participation is solid and the programs always make their minimum numbers. Some even have waiting lists.

"It's really about programming. It's about keeping the interest up in the kind of programs we're doing. It's exciting," she said. "We have partnered with the Keane Foundation on some programs. A lot of good things are happening."

Students learn from highly accomplished professional artists. Class sizes range from four to 15 and that permits plenty of opportunity for one-to-one instruction and critique.

"Individual attention is very critical," Standish said.

If the academy is to continue to thrive, she said its students must leave happy and feeling that they got positive results. Individual attention is a key ingredient of that outcome.

The academy will offer a classical Atelier drawing class for teenagers during the April school vacation week. The cost is $200, including materials.

Standish explained that Atelier is a European style of art education in which students learn under the guidance of a master artist.

There are classes, workshops and lectures for the novice through the professional to benefit from study, apprenticeship, exhibition and performance.

Open Sketch is offered the first Saturday of each month and classes run in six-week sessions. Upcoming classes include: Atelier drawing, anatomy drawing, figures, color theory and cast drawing.

There is also Bargue drawing, based upon the principles of French artist Charles Bargue. Students must draw specific plates he created to look as much like the originals as possible in this foundational program.

George O'Hanlon is scheduled to present a Painting Best Practices Workshop April 13-15. Workshops on 17th century Dutch still life in oils and watercolor painting are coming up in May and June, respectively.

An August workshop on landscape painting is already sold out. The academy will conduct an Art Market fundraiser June 3 in conjunction with the first Wethersfield Weekend celebration.

"It's an opportunity for people in the community to buy real art," Standish said.

Younger students can take advantage of the summer youth art program. The academy is supported, in part, by the Greater Hartford Arts Council.

Standish said the academy's programs are now attracting participants from a wider area. She added that the personal touch of a live class is, in her firm opinion, better than anything one can learn online.

"There's nothing that replaces a live teacher," she said.

Those who select one or more of the programs can develop a strong foundation in their particular style of art. They also enjoy the warmth and camaraderie offered by instructors and fellow students, she added.

Deanne Annunziato commutes from North Haven to partake of the academy's classes. She said they are the best to be found anywhere in Connecticut and hopes that what she is learning will enable her to become a professional artist.

"I've taken the drawing courses that they offer and some of the painting workshops. The quality of the instructors and the courses offered are phenomenal," she said.

Annunziato firmly believes she would have to travel to Boston or New York City to find something of similar excellence.

"Betty's able to pull in high-quality talent. They are experts in their fields," she said. "Every class, I walk away with a measureable improvement in my skill." WL

CREST Dive Team does its investigatory work under water

by Mark Jahne
Editor

Sometimes criminals dispose of evidence of their misdeeds in the water. Other times there may be the need to retrieve a car or person that has submerged in a river, lake, or pond.

Either way, the members of the CREST Police Dive Team train on a regular basis to handle such situations. CREST stands for Capitol Region Emergency Services Team.

It is a shared law enforcement resource staffed by officers from East Hartford, Glastonbury, Hartford, Rocky Hill, South Windsor, West Hartford and Wethersfield.

These are not rescue divers who rush to the scene of a crisis to pull someone out of a car that may have gone into the water. Fire department or other rescue units usually handle that task.

CREST divers perform a recovery role, in large part because it takes time to mobilize a multi-town team and responding rapidly to active incidents is not practical.

On a recent Wednesday morning, team members traveled to Bigelow Hollow State Park in Ashford to hone their skills in an ice-covered pond. They were assisted by Tolland County firefighters and other emergency personnel that perform public safety diving.

A diamond-shaped hole was cut in the center of the ice that was six inches thick. A smaller hole was drilled 30 feet away. The objective this day was for divers to enter the water through the large hole and come out of the smaller one.

Sgt. Mike Dobler and Cpl. Ron Littell of South Windsor ran the drill. Safety was a foremost concern and all details were carefully reviewed before anyone entered the icy pond. Winter water is typically in the 30s in terms of degrees Fahrenheit, they said.

"Today's operation is to get divers into the water," Littell said.

The divers would then flip upside down and operate in that manner, like a spider crawling across the ceiling. Whether training or responding to a call, the team always works from what is determined to be safe ice that will not break beneath their weight.

Those who were scheduled to dive donned special suits that keep them warm and dry. They were hauled out to the diving hole on a sled so as not to exhaust themselves by walking across the ice while wearing these suits and heavy air tanks.

No one goes under the water without support. Every diver is paired with a tender who stays out of the water. A rope connects the two.

Communication is primarily achieved by radio but sometimes these don't work so well in wet conditions. So they fall back on the still-effective, old-school method of having the tender direct the diver which way to turn, and how to otherwise proceed, by tugging on the rope a certain number of times.

The diver can also use the rope to notify the tender if he is in any kind of distress so that emergency

Both the dentist and hygienist were empathetic and did not have to make me feel guiltier than I already did. The office is impeccable, all of the staff are always kind and professional, and I absolutely love this practice."

action can be taken to save him. The tenders guided the divers from the entry hole to the smaller exit hole in this manner.

Search patterns are conducted in a methodical manner and team members are proud to say that they are able to find items as small as cell phones and handguns in even the murkiest water.

Sgt. Steve Morgan and Officer Jon Lammers of the Rocky Hill Police Department are members of the team. Both are divers, although often one will tend for the other.

Morgan was asked what motivated him to take on this specialized duty.

"I'm a diver anyway," he said.

"A spot opened up on the team and it's something I was interested in. We do evidence recovery, not just bodies."

He started scuba diving 12 years ago.

life. He is in his thirty-second year with WHPD.

"I'm a public safety scuba diver, have been for years," he said. "I was a scuba diver before I was a policeman."

Officer Charles Upton is a 20-year veteran of the Glastonbury

Police Department. He developed a personal interest in diving and that led him to join the CREST team.

"I love underwater diving," he said. "We find a lot of small things in the river."

Upton said the team tends to be activated because of a tragedy or serious crime, often during bad weather and when river currents run strong.

"Any time we get called out, it's lousy," he said.

Officer Al Whaples is

Wethersfield's lone member of the team. He is a certified diver, but his duties with this team are above the water as a line tender and operator of Wethersfield's police boat.

"I've been on the team since its inception back in 2003," he said. "We've had a lot of good times together."

Whaples enjoys both the work and the camaraderie. He described the search patterns the divers employ as an excellent way to find even small objects.

Griswoldville Preservation Association wants to replace signs

by Mark Jahne
Editor

The Griswoldville Preservation Association was formed many years ago to preserve the residential nature of the historic southwestern part of town that features a colonial chapel and waterways that once powered mills.

It has quietly gone about its business, for the most part, on occasion advocating for the neighborhood at Town Hall. Now it is taking a role in replacing or restoring signs that denote the area's historic significance.

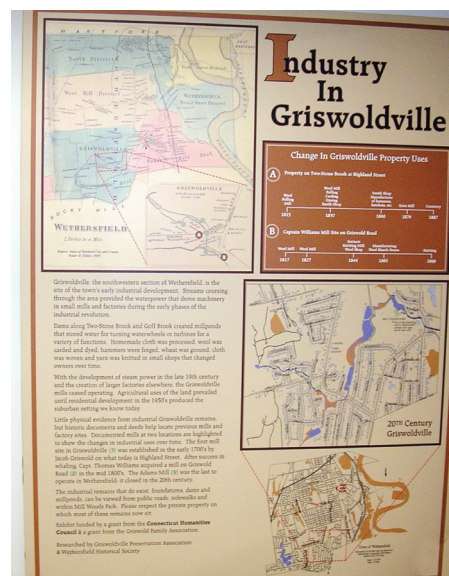

Old Wethersfield gets all of the attention as far as local history but George Washington did pass through Griswoldville at least three times in his life. The neighborhood is also home to the oldest house in town, according to a 1999 GPA newsletter.

Once upon a time it engaged in garage sales and Christmas caroling. It supports, but is a separate entity from, the Griswoldville Chapel, which dates from November 1872. The GPA holds an annual meeting at the chapel and has done so for more than 20 years.

The founding members of the GPA stated that it will not be engaged in politics and would operate as a nonprofit entity. That remains true today.

"I moved to Griswoldville back in 1992," Martha Mayer said.

Martha Mayer and Dave Kraus are leaders of the Griswoldville Preservation Association.

She is the longtime president of the GPA and used to lead walking tours of the neighborhood. Dave Kraus of Randy Lane has been involved with the association since 1976.

"Most people don't realize the history of Griswoldville," he said. "This is the 1700s. This is old."

"They built this whole hydraulic system from the reservoir down to the park, with mill ponds," Mayer added.

Back in the 1990s the GPA installed green and gold leaf community identification signs at three locations: Griswold Road at Maple Street, Griswold Road at Merriman damaged signs. A total of 324 contributions, many larger than $10, have been received thus far.

"We had $800 in our treasury when we started this and now we've got $1,700," Mayer said.

"It shows the strength of the community to me," Kraus added. "It would be nice to get more people involved."

Hand painting and gold lettering are both expensive propositions so the new signs may not be done in that manner. Plus the man who painted them has since retired. Town crews will hang them once they are completed, but the work has not even begun.

Road, and Highland Street near Thornbush Road.

That last one was destroyed in a storm and the association would like to replace it. They were hand painted and finished in gold lettering more than 20 years ago.

It also placed signs at Mill Woods Park and in the Wethersfield Room of the public library in 2001 telling the story of the mills for which the town's largest park is named. This was done with the support of the Connecticut Humanities Council and Wethersfield Historical Society.

The sign located near the park's concession stand is badly weathered and barely legible.

The association recently sent a mailing to 2,000 homes throughout the neighborhood asking residents to contribute $10 each to fund replacement of the demolished and "Part of the problem is the cost of these things," Kraus said.

"When the group started, it was a NIMBY group," Mayer said. "It was much more active during the '90s" and members regularly attended Town Council meetings."

NIMBY is an acronym for Not In My Back Yard. Over time, the group decided to take a more positive tack with the signs, walking tours and tag sales. Kraus considers all of those things beneficial to maintaining the neighborhood's identity.

Anyone who is interested in contributing to the sign replacement effort may write a check to the Griswoldville Preservation Association and mail it to Mary Anne Smyers, 76 Ox Yoke Drive, Wethersfield, CT 06109. For further information contact Martha Mayer at m4mayer@att.net. WL

Empty Bowls will help fill hungry stomachs

by Mark Jahne
Editor

Students in the town's elementary schools are creating ceramic bowls in their art classrooms after school. It's all part of the Empty Bowls project to help feed the hungry.

This is not a new concept in this town or state. Schools all around the country sometimes engage in the Empty Bowls project. But the students are usually of high school age. Not so here in Wethersfield.

One recent afternoon, youngsters at Hanmer School were busily working to create, paint and glaze bowls as part of a two-month, after-school civic project. Music played in the background as art teacher Rebecca Weaver oversaw the proceedings.

Principal Margaret Zacchei explained that every school is expected to pursue three basic goals this academic year: academic, problem solving and community service.

This project fulfills the latter.

She likes that Empty Bowls encourages students to think beyond themselves or even their immediate families about a need in the community. Statistics provided by the local Hunger Action Team, coordinated by Foodshare, as well as the Wethersfield Early Childhood Collaborative indicate that the number of children and families in town in need of food support is growing.

"Now the focus is on looking out a little more ... this is a wonderful activity to meet our civic goal," Zacchei said.

She also likes that it involves partnering with other organizations such as Foodshare and the town Department of Social and Youth Services, which administers the local food bank.

"This has students working on a hands-on project that they will see through to the end," she said.

Weaver brought the idea to Zacchei and the principal enthusiastically supported the project.

"I picked up on this while attending the Connecticut Art Educators Conference in the fall," Weaver said.

She explained that all five public elementary schools are participating in Empty Bowls but each one is doing it in its own way. Weaver also attended a HAT meeting Jan. 20 and was further motivated. She is in the process of writing a grant for money to purchase additional materials.

Participating students at Hanmer met twice weekly to craft their bowls through the end of February. Their colorful handiwork will be sold for $10 each and the money donated to Foodshare, an organization serving Hartford and Tolland counties that is dedicated to fighting hunger and providing those in need with sustenance.

"Some of these kids might be among those who benefit," Weaver said while watching them busily working on their bowls.

There are four different types of bowls being created. This project was offered to children in grades 4-6 and the number of students who expressed an interest was more than the classroom could handle.

Brynn Lisella was busy working on a potter's wheel to mold a clay bowl, the first step in the process. She has become familiar with all four styles being crafted around the room.

"I did it just to help other people. I especially like making things with clay," the fifth-grader said.

While all this was going on, Samantha Coty and Maddie Gove were moving around the room as reporters for the Hanmer Hoot video team. They interviewed the bowl makers while recording it all on a tablet. Their report will appear on a restricted YouTube channel for the entire school to enjoy. WL

Member Joe Mehan and Pastor Chris Skowronek stand alongside the cross at CenterPoint Community Church.

Faith has many faces

CenterPoint Community Church grows within its storefront setting

by Mark Jahne
Editor

They may be small in size, but they are mighty in their worship of God. Faith is where you find it and that's just fine with the members of CenterPoint Community Church.

Housed in a non-traditional setting on the first floor of an office building, the young church is working hard to hold events and draw more worshipers into the fold. It is located at 840 Silas Deane Highway on the first floor of the Marcus Insurance building in space previously occupied by an auto parts store.

The Rev. Chris Skowronek, a married father of four and its pastor, has taken an active role in the community. He is the chaplain of the Wethersfield Volunteer Fire Department and serves with the Senior Citizens Advisory Council. He is involved in other volunteer efforts, among them the Juvenile Review Board.

The church has held blood drives to benefit the American Red Cross, a live Christian music concert, free comedy nights and family movie nights to raise money for the town's food pantry. Members also prepare and serve a meal each month at the South Park Inn homeless shelter in Hartford.

"We prepare meals for 150," church member Joe Mehan said.

Every Sunday begins with café time from 9:30-10 a.m., at which time services are held. More café time takes place at the conclusion of worship from 11:15-11:45 a.m.

Children's classes and a nursery are held at the same time as the worship service. Evening activities throughout the week include small groups, Bible study, youth group, family activities and community service.

According to its literature, the church strives to help its members know Jesus on a personal level, experience his love in a community of faith, and live out their faith every day. It was formed in 2006 and initially utilized space at Webb School for worship.

"We opened in this building in 2010," Skowronek said. "We're part of a group called Converge. It used to be called the Baptist General Conference."

Mehan was asked to describe here is living our faith."

Mehan also likes that Skowronek embellishes his preaching with visual effects. Both he and the pastor were raised as Roman Catholics. Mehan recruited Skowronek for the Senior Citizens

It eventually led to a non-traditional course of study through Grace Seminary in Winona Lake, Ind. CenterPoint has grown to the point where it was able to help the fledgling River Church in Glastonbury get its start.

"It's kind of thrilling to be part of that," Skowronek said.

"You have a spectrum of people in Wethersfield and it seems to me a lot have given up on church. We're trying to do creative things to re-engage people with their faith," he said.

His belief is that they will return to faith if offered a different and more inspiring manner of worship. CenterPoint was created with the idea of offering people another option on how they can express their belief in God.

"Faith is something that people need, no matter what. Our goal is to try to help people reconnect with their faith, reconnect with Jesus," he said.

Skowronek and his

the congregation, which has approximately 75 members. They cover the spectrum of ages, from little children to senior citizens.

"It's definitely non-traditional. Definitely family oriented, Bible oriented. My wife and I got involved three years ago. It's the best thing we ever did," he said. "One of the things we really enjoy Advisory Council.

"When I went to college is when I really started exploring my faith," Skowronek said.

He joined a Christian group at the University of Connecticut and that experience had a profound impact on him.

"That, to me, was a whole new world of faith," he said.

congregation also reach out to other Christian churches in town to share their faith and maximize volunteer efforts.

"We've worked hard with First Church and the [Wethersfield] Evangelical Free Church to stay connected and work together," he said. "Wethersfield is a nice town in that they want clergy involved. I enjoy interacting with people."

The three churches band together for community service projects and an annual shared religious service.

CenterPoint tries to offer unique programs to benefit its members and draw others into its building. One such example is a three-part series on financial advice.

"If we can just get them in the door one time, they can see what it's all about," Mehan said.

"My experience with church growing up in the South End of Hartford and Wethersfield was probably pretty typical of most people who grew up in this area. Church was not all that exciting or compelling. I went because I felt I had to go," Skowronek said.

"But when I was in high school, I had a teacher that asked some tough questions about why we went to church and what we believed. Thinking back, he wasn't trying to give us a hard time, but he did want us to think about our faith and why we bothered to go to church, and if either really made a difference in our lives.

"That experience is what really got my faith in God started ... as God became more real to me and as I began to see how much my faith in Jesus was changing my life in so many wonderful ways, I began to wonder – what if the church was less of an institution and more like a family of faith where we learned about our faith together, encouraged one another, and because of our faith we got involved in the community and made a difference?

"I felt God's calling on my life to become a pastor and lead that kind of church and CenterPoint was born. It's not my church, it's God's church, and we are a family of faith where Jesus is the center of everything we do whether it's Sunday worship, Bible study, fun family events or comedy nights, blood drives, or doing something in the community," he said.

Upcoming activities include a May 14 Mother's Day brunch and June 3 spring tag sale. The church is handicapped accessible and has additional parking in the rear as well as in neighboring lots. WL

Jo Homar moves from corporate world to healing world

by Mara Dresner
Staff Writer

Jo Homar is working in the same building where she had a corporate career for years, but her current work is worlds apart.

While she's done every thing from running a kitchen in a convalescent home to working as an executive assistant, Homar now devotes her time to helping others in a different way. She was working for a reinsurance company about five years ago when she noticed something curious.

"Every time I'd be coming to work, I'd be getting vertigo. I was not feeling well. I didn't understand what was happening. It was unsettling. I thought, 'Oh my God, I'm allergic to work,'" she recalled.

"I'd had a lot of heightened spiritual developments that were happening. I was fortunate enough to meet a craniosacral therapist, who was really intuitive, very helpful at that stage."

She came to realize that the vertigo was a sign of disharmony and that a career change was needed.

"It wasn't an easy decision. Society says we have to have a corporate job; we're supposed to plan. I've always done all those steps. I've always been a responsible individual. But there were vibrational shifts in my body, messages I was receiving," she said.

"I went and had a bunch of trainings and attunements. I was certified in Reiki and other healing modalities so I could better understand what was happening and how to use it to heal myself."

She didn't know at first that she would turn this experience into her own company, Bountiful Blessings, which offers intuitive healing and guidance, as well as Reiki and other services.

"I really liked my corporate job and I liked the individuals I was working with. If I wasn't guided in a holistic direction, I'd still be there today," she added.

She first rented a room in Glastonbury and would see clients after work and on weekends before leasing a space on the Silas Deane Highway in Wethersfield. This past Jo Homar left a corporate job to pursue a career in intuitive healing and guidance.

November, she moved to the Corporate Ridge Business Complex in Rocky Hill, in the same building where she used to work.

Homar has had otherworldly connections since she was young.

early age I'd be doing something and as I was doing it, [I'd feel] I had already done it before. I'd have conversations with individuals and knew exactly what they would say and what I would respond with before it would happen," she said.

"I didn't understand what was happening. I didn't have anyone to talk to about it. It was not the norm for the family," added Homar.

"I suppressed it and pushed it down and went about my childhood. Things started really changing when my mom was diagnosed with cancer in 2000. While she was in hospice, she would be verbalizing a lot of future events while in that in-between state of the physical world to the spiritual world.

"It really piqued my interest and reactivated a lot of things that I'd suppressed from my childhood," she said.

Homar struggled to deal with her mother's death. One day, one of her sisters was approached by a stranger at a bus stop.

"He said, 'I don't mean to upset you or scare you, but your mom wants to talk to your sister.' I've always believed in the psychic and spiritual realm, but she wasn't really into it. My sister was, 'Which one does she want to talk to?'"

"He said, 'She wants to talk to the one who just built the big yellow house,'" Homar recalled, which described her home in Wethersfield.

She has learned to use her gifts to help others.

"My sessions are always divinely guided. I'm always guided by spirit for each individual each time they come. They just book the time, whether it's healing or a reading or guidance or messages. A lot of times, it's both healing and guidance. Messages aren't just messages from spirit. There's really a whole healing aspect to it," she said.

"That's why I allow myself to be guided and focused on the individual each time they come. What you need when you come today might not be what you need the next time you come," she added.

"The environment I create and the environment the spirit creates is a very caring and nurturing environment. The way the spirit works for me is it's always positive information that comes in. It's always a safe environment," Homar said.

"You never hear anything you're not ready to receive. I keep it positive. It's important that you come into a safe and professional environment."

Homar explained that there are four ways of perceiving energies, such as clairvoyance, which is clear seeing, and clear cognition, which is simply knowing.

"I have ability to do all four. I don't get to choose; it's up to them. Most of the time the guides come in and I see them and they talk to me. It's just like we're having a conversation. I receive the conversation and I can relay it to the client," she said.

"I've learned over the years that we all have an internal guidance system."

"My connection is a pure, straight connection to source, and it's visual and hearing, for the most part. It's like a three-way conversation."

Homar doesn't just work with people, she's also able to help animals.

"Pet communication was very surprising to me the first time it happened," she said.

"I've found throughout the years if energy, dead or alive, has a message to give, it will come through, whether it's an animal or a human, whether they speak English. It's like a grandmother who spoke only Italian and they have to speak to me in English. We're all energy beings, whether we're human or animal. I'm connecting with their energy, their soul, their being."

Deb Smith of Wethersfield sought Homar's services for both herself and her dog Skippy.

"I was feeling very unfocused, a little anxious and kind of blue. Also, I wanted to ask about my dog, who was acting very aggressive toward a workman at my house and has never been aggressive like that before. Jo explained the dog was worried about me, but subsequently calmed down," Smith said.

"Jo did a healing session which greatly relieved my anxiety, made me feel relaxed and lifted my spirits. Skippy wasn't there. It was just me, but she communicated with him anyway. [It's] hard to believe, I know, but she's the real deal."

Homar said it's not unusual to work with a client who is not in the room.

She also works and teaches in Arizona and she and her husband, Howard, recently bought land there.

"There are a lot of like-minded individuals in that area. They're a lot more advanced or willing to learn or to engage in this type of healing work," she said.

Many of her clients make appointments because a loved one has died or because they have a medical situation.

Homar doesn't ask for any history when a first-time client comes in. On one such encounter, the spirit told her to check for Lyme disease.

Although the client had already been checked for the illness and had been experiencing symptoms for five years, she had a different test and it came back positive for Lyme.

"She left me a voicemail; she was crying, she was so happy, not that she was diagnosed with Lyme disease, but that she had the answer and able to get on the correct course of treatment," said Homar.

While she has special gifts, she said all people have abilities that perhaps they are not using.

"I've learned over the years that we all have an internal guidance system; we're all born with an internal guidance system. Some choose to be aware of it and some choose to ignore it. We all need help sometimes, whether it's guidance or healing," she said. WL

Author completes trilogy

'Spiritual Intervention' is final book in paranormal romance series

by Mara Dresner
Staff Writer

Author Glenn Maynard never knows when inspiration will strike. "I write at night and I think of storylines whenever I'm driving, doing cardio at the gym or engaging in any task that permits my mind to wander. My mind looks at every TV show, news story or life event as a potential story line, even if it's only a bit part," he said.

While he works full time at UnitedHealthcare reviewing health plans, he still found the time to write a paranormal romance trilogy. The final book in the series, "Spiritual Intervention," was published this past December. The other two books are "Desert Son" and "Wayward Soul."

"I was initially inspired by a book about reincarnation and I wanted to incorporate other paranormal situations such as out-of-body and past-life regression hypnosis. These are the three elements comprising the first book of the trilogy, "Desert Son," he said.

Writing fiction was a new experience for Maynard. His first book was non-fiction and detailed a one-year journey through the 48 continental states, Canada and Mexico in a recreational vehicle.

"After publishing my first book, 'Strapped into an American Dream,' I pulled out a second manuscript which I had written in the mid-'90s entitled 'Desert Son.' It was only 49,000 words, which was hardly novella size, so I had to add to the length. I elaborated on scenes in the book while keeping the plot intact," he said.

"When 'Desert Son' was published in 2014, one of the excited reviewers noticed the way I ended it, suggesting that I did so because there was something more up my sleeve. There was not, but the seed for the trilogy was planted at this time. It wasn't just the second book idea that was planted. I knew then that I needed to make it a trilogy," he added.

"I wrote 'Desert Son' in the mid-'90s as an experiment with writing fiction. I didn't find out until many years later that it was a fantastic tale. Once the enthusiastic reviews started to come in, I knew I had created something special, so writing the trilogy was an easy decision. 'Wayward Soul' and 'Spiritual Intervention' were both published in 2016."

The three books are published by Black Rose Writing.

"Completing a trilogy was the most rewarding aspect of writing this book. The question for books two and three were the same in the beginning — where on earth am I going to take this story using the same set of characters? I found the answers to that question 1,000 words at a time," Maynard said.

He noted that "Spiritual Intervention" continues the journey of several characters from the previous books.

"Carter and Brenda, the couple who reconnected from a past life in the first book, are married in book three. Martin, the tormented soul who had been after them in the first two books, follows them in their move from Boulder to Boston and now torments their six-year-old son," he said.

"Martin needs to be pushed into the afterlife where he belongs, but he isn't too keen on going."

Maynard changed up his writing routine when working on "Spiritual Intervention."

"I tried a very different technique in the third book in an attempt to keep the third book fresh. I did not write from an outline. There were only a couple of thoughts of where I wanted to take the story and I needed to wrap up the series," he said.

"I just started writing with one goal in mind and that was to reach 100,000 words. I did just that. What I discovered was that I was taking off in different directions and the storyline was unfolding before my eyes.

"When all was said and done, I noticed that it was a good technique to write more, but the shaping and reshaping process that goes along with editing was more of a monumental task than writing with an outline," he added. "With an outline the majority of the shaping is done in the beginning. Without an outline, the majority of the shaping is done at the end."

Some of his fans are those who have known him for years. Rich Praus of Enfield used to work with Maynard in the early 2000s at Cigna in Bloomfield. After leaving the company in 2006, he reconnected at a book signing in Vernon for "Strapped into an American Dream" in 2011. He's since been to book signings for "Desert Son" and "Wayward Soul."

"I must admit that I was a bit surprised at the subject matter of his trilogy. Glenn always struck me as a somewhat laid-back personality with a good sense of humor, not the type of person that would be writing about the supernatural. This was quite a departure from the subject matter of his first book, which was a semi-humorous travelogue," Praus said.

"Nonetheless, he manages to pull it off and deliver an intriguing story of the intertwining of the real world and the spiritual world. I'm looking forward to reading the conclusion of the adventure."

Maynard likes being a bit unexpected and hopes that people will take away "an appreciation for the way I put a new spin on out-of-this-world topics like reincarnation, out-of-body and past-life regression."

He's already thinking about his next book.

"I'm currently putting an outline together about online chat rooms gone wrong," he said. "Just hope and pray that you don't come across this guy next time you're looking for a harmless chat." WL

Jasper

Jasper is a black male domestic shorthair mix with a gentle disposition and friendly nature. Just 2 years old, he is neutered and best suited for a home where the children are age 8 or older and respectful of animals. He's OK sharing his new home with other cats, but has no experience living with a dog. Any kind of home is welcome, whether it's a single-family, multi-family or condominium residence.

Ivy

Ivy is a senior citizen in dog terms. She is a friendly 11-year-old Terrier/Staffordshire Bull mix. She's spayed and housebroken and would do well in either a single-family home or condo. Children of any age are fine and so are cats, but other dogs could create a problem for this gentle old gal. She likes to relax and hopes to find a family with prior general dog experience.

Sharing his love of tennis

Ian Thompson helps train athletes for the Special Olympics

by Mark Jahne
Edit

Tennis is a fairly new event for Wethersfield residents who want to participate in the Special Olympics. To help them prepare, Ian Thompson works with these athletes to help them learn the skills to become successful players.

They practice at either the Stillman courts in Old Wethersfield or Pine Acres Swim and Tennis Club from June through August. The rest of the year the group can be found indoors at the Rocky Hill Tennis Center.

Ian, who is a senior at Xavier High School in Middletown, is training five players ages 10 to 19 with the help of Molly Garcia of Portland, a member of the tennis team at Mercy High School in Middletown.

"My dad [Paul] got me started at Pine Acres," he said.

That was six years ago. Ian, now

17 years old, became accomplished enough at the game that he made the varsity squad all four years at Xavier.

"Me and my doubles partner made it to the second round of the state's last season," he said.

The idea to teach special needs youngsters how to play tennis evolved over time.

"It started from scratch. I started working on it over the summer and the first official season was in the fall," Ian said. "I worked at Pine Acres as a tennis instructor. I use it as training as well for tennis season."

He saw children with autism struggling to learn the game and thought he could help. His father encouraged him to follow through with that idea.

"It's going very well. I've heard really positive comments from the parents," Ian said.

He is waiting to hear back from the last of three colleges he applied to before deciding where he will matriculate. Wherever he goes, he expects to continue playing tennis at the club level, but not as a varsity sport.

Ian also plays soccer and ran on his school's indoor track team. Three of his pupils came to him with absolutely no experience but that didn't present a problem.

"I'm on the board of directors at Pine Acres for tennis," Paul Thompson said. "I helped Ian approach the club to get donated court time."

He also serves as an adult supervisor to his son's program. He spoke of the level of enthusiasm the young people display.

"Every single player wants to be here," he said.

Thompson expects more players will join the program as word of it spreads. He's also working in conjunction with Natalie Morrison of the town Parks and Recreation Department, who organizes the town's Special Olympics contingent, and said they enjoy the support of the Town Council.

The hope is that one or more of these tennis students will be able to qualify to participate in the Special Olympics.

Ian will be going away to college in September, so his next priority is to find someone to take his place until he returns to town in May 2018. WL

Children enrolled in the First Church Preschool sing welcoming songs to the guests who toured the renovated Marsh Building.

The Marsh Building at the First Church of Christ in Wethersfield was in serious need of repair. A $2.7 million project that took more than a decade to go from concept to construction was recently completed.

First Church unveils repairs and renovations to its Marsh Building

by Mark Jahne

Editor

It took 14 years of planning and struggle, but the work is now complete. The multi-purpose Marsh Building at the First Church of Christ in Wethersfield has been repaired, renovated and turned into a welcoming, bright facility that can host a number of uses.

Church officials offered a tour of the building to town officials and other guests the morning of March 9. After a few words of welcome, everyone was ushered into a large room where children from the preschool program that is housed at First Church greeted everyone with song.

The fully renovated two-story brick building was originally constructed in the 1950s. It now features the spacious Keith Jones Hall, a sitting parlor, a kitchen, David C. Spicer Music Room, Mildred E. Jones Media Room & Art Gallery, a prayer room, outreach gift shop and other spaces where meeting and classes can be conducted.

The space will also be used for choir rehearsal, contemporary worship, concerts and dinner. It cost $2.7 million to complete the repairs and renovations. Church officials made it a point of emphasis that they want to share this space with the community at large.

A major impetus for this project, funded by a capital campaign launched in 2015, is the steady growth of attendance at the contemporary worship service that was founded in 2001. Removing an outdated elevated stage and installing modern seating in the upstairs hall of the Marsh Building provides space for 173 worshippers.

Heating and air conditioning systems were updated. The project brought the building into compliance with the Americans with Disabilities Act as well as modern building and fire codes.

“Decades ago, our facilities expanded through the labor and sacrifice of previous generations and now it was our turn to do our part,” board President Paul Breglio said.

“Our vision is to have a place to be a family and to welcome our community, so that, in the future, First Church is always at the center of our community.”

First Church looks for ways to meet human needs in town and throughout Greater Hartford, the Rev. Deryk Richenbourg said. He serves as senior pastor.

It hosts a state-certified preschool program, American Red Cross blood drives and ministries for those suffering from divorce or the loss of a loved one. Local children are invited to attend its summer Vacation Bible Camp.

“We’ve been linked with the town of Wethersfield for more than 380 years. We want to find ways to continue to have that link moving forward,” Richenbourg said.

The congregation recently formed a group that is working to combat human trafficking in Connecticut.

“We had lost a third of this building to mold, mildew and moisture,” Breglio said during the tour.

They also had to correct a significant groundwater problem.

The historic Meetinghouse at First Church, located in the center of the largest historic district in Connecticut, was erected in 1761 to serve a congregation dating from 1635. It also served as the assembly hall for town meetings, a role it fulfilled until 1838.

Famous people including Jonathan Edwards, George Washington and John Adams visited and/or worshipped at this church. The Marsh Building is connected to the sanctuary on its east side. The building was named for the Rev. John Marsh, who served as senior pastor from 1774-1821. WL

Hartford circus fire survivor looks back on her narrow escape

by Mark Jahne
Editor

What most people remember about the circus is the elephants or the tigers. Or maybe it's the acrobats or the clowns.

When Dolores (Sicilia) DiFazio thinks about the circus, she thinks about flames.

The longtime Wethersfield resident was 8 years old when she went with her mother and older brother Alexander to the circus on July 6, 1944, the date of the infamous Hartford circus fire.

A total of 168 people perished in that blaze and at least 484 more suffered injuries. In those days paraffin, an inflammable substance, was used to make the canvas big top tent covering the circus waterproof. It served as fuel for the flames.

She hadn't thought much about the fire for decades but the memories came rushing back when the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus recently announced that it was ceasing operations.

Dolores DiFazio holds a book about the 1944 Hartford circus fire written by Stewart O'Nan. She is a survivor of that fire.

Photos by Mark Jahne

"It was an experience that I put out of my mind until they said the circus would no longer be in existence," she said.

That summer day 73 years ago was her first opportunity to see the circus and she was excited to be there. Her family lived in the North End of city at the time.

"I don't remember going before that," DiFazio said. "We went in and it was very crowded. We had very main entrance and saw flames. Her brother, 11 at the time, quickly sized up the situation and told the family that they could not flee in that direction. He led them up the steps and away from the rapidly spreading inferno.

"We walked all the way to the top of the seating," DiFazio said.

It was a long way down, but the three of them jumped.

The two children were unhurt.

good seats."

She recalled that they sat in wooden folding chairs that were connected to one another. The Sicilia family was close to the center of the action. She was enjoying the show when she recalled someone yelling "fire."

The girl looked toward the

Their mother twisted her ankle on landing and lost her hat and purse in the rush to get out before the entire tent became engulfed in fire.

"There must have been an angel on our shoulders," DiFazio said.

"We would never have made it to that front entrance."

She remembers Alexander holding a tent flap in a way that people in the top seats could roll down and escape. She is convinced that he is an unsung hero.

"He saved a lot of people," she said. She remembers thinking how it was that, even as the fire spread, "the music kept playing" and circus personnel seemed unaware of what was happening.

By the time the three of them started running through an open field to get away the tent was completely ablaze. A passing motorist stopped to offer his assistance and drove them to her grandmother's house, which was close by.

DiFazio said her father heard about the fire and became alarmed when he arrived home from work and his wife and children were missing. She added that he panicked when he couldn't find them and rushed to a temporary morgue that had been established at the state armory to determine if they were among the dead.

Her uncle eventually connected with him by telephone to share the news that they were safe. DiFazio said she still shudders at the close call they experienced and how lucky they were to evacuate unharmed.

"It was sheer panic. I'm glad I didn't see a lot. We ran out very quickly," she recalled. WL

Another unpleasant budget season arrives

Some year, towns will be able to enjoy a budget cycle when money is sufficient, new initiatives can be launched and the mill rate can be reduced to make the lives of taxpayers less stressful. But not this year.

Just when it looked like Connecticut might be coming out of a decade-long recession, the bottom fell out of the state budget. Legislators are struggling to find ways to stop the red ink from washing over the budget like a tsunami, already more than $1 billion in deficit.

One of the problems with this scenario is that it trickles down in a mighty way to cities and towns. Municipalities depend upon state financial assistance to balance their own budgets and keep local taxes under control. Many get 15 percent of more of their total annual budget from the state.

That number is likely to be much less this year. The legislature needs to trim everywhere it can and it also has to deal with making sure that Hartford, which is in dire financial straits, does not go belly up. This does not bode well for most towns.

As any homeowner knows, it costs more each year just to live the same life and pay for the same goods and services. Prices for everything from food to electricity to gasoline to countless other needs rise on an annual basis.

The same is true for municipalities. Maintaining the status quo still costs more money than it did the previous year and usually results in a tax increase of 1 or 2 percent. Much of that is driven by labor costs, but people are an integral part of government and public education.

The real problem is the heavy dependence on the property tax to fund local government. Most other states don't allow this one tax to bear so much of the fiscal burden.

When he conducted his traveling road show seeking input and support from the suburbs, Hartford Mayor Luke Bronin suggested that state government take a small percentage of its sales tax revenue and designate that for municipal aid. That's a good idea.

Of course, this makes the task of balancing the state budget more difficult. So the likelihood of his suggestion being adopted is weak.

Bronin and many other mayors and first selectmen have also called for maintaining, or even increasing, state aid, especially the PILOT program that provides partial payment for otherwise tax-exempt state buildings, hospitals, colleges and more.

That's another reasonable solution but it's also not likely to happen because of the state's money problems.

Add to all this the fact that almost every city and town in Connecticut has a charter that requires it to adopt a budget weeks, if not months, before the state does the same. So when it comes to how much state aid they want to factor into their plans, all they can do is guess. WL

State needs fiscal sense

To the Editor:

While I do realize the State of the State address was at the beginning of the month, the issues presented are too important to disregard. The acknowledgment that Governor [Dannel] Malloy made about education was one that I admired. Children, no matter their area code, should have an equal opportunity of a quality education system.

However, what worried me was how confident he seemed with how we are representing our money. Connecticut is ranked as a state with the worst financial status. With all of the data Governor Malloy proclaimed, why didn't he mention the $1.65 billion of debt that we are in?

I would have liked to hear reasoning for why Governor Malloy has increased taxes a substantial amount, cut state employees by 28 percent and yet we are in the worst debt in history. Where is the proof that he has made all of these cuts?

I also would have liked to hear more about the proposal of bringing back tolls on the bridges. People are moving out of Connecticut and no one is moving in.

It is putting more pressure on us residents to make up for the deficit. He has taxed everything in sight and overextended himself. We're not ahead of the game, we're behind it.

—Alexandra Emmanuel

WVAA offers appreciation

To the Editor:

I want to publicly thank Fire Chief Rich Bailey and the Wethersfield

Fire Department for all of the assistance provided to the Wethersfield Volunteer Ambulance Association on Tuesday, March 14. The weather and road conditions were brutal and the WFD was instrumental in allowing us to respond to multiple medical emergencies that day.

Chief Bailey and his volunteers helped guide us to the scenes and obtain access to our patients. I also want to thank the Wethersfield Police Department and Aetna Ambulance who were tremendous throughout the course of a very challenging day.

Finally, the hard work of the town employees who cleared walkways and driveways to allow us to get to our patients is also greatly appreciated.

A Warm, Snowy winter...

Meteorological Winter is defined as the months of December, January and February. For the Greater Hartford Area, records have been kept since 1905 and are currently maintained at Bradley International Airport in Windsor Locks. So how did this winter compare to others?

The average temperature for the season was 33.0° ... that's 3.9° above normal and makes this past winter, 2016-17, the 10th warmest! This is just one year after the 2nd warmest winter (in 2015-16, the average temperature was 35.1° – just 0.1° away from the record warmest, the winter of 2001-02). Last winter, records were also set for the number of 50° and 60° days.

At Bridgeport (another official recording station in Connecticut), January went down as the warmest on record at 6.8° above normal. It was then followed by one of the warmest Februarys, the 28 days averaged 6.0° above normal.

During the course of the season, Windsor Locks had 8.71" of precipitation (rain, plus the water equivalent of snow, sleet and ice), this was 0.85" below average. Total snowfall was 41.2", an impressive 10.5" above average (a daily snowfall record was set on February 9th, with Blizzard Chris – 15.5" was received, breaking the prior record of 13.0" from 1969).

When making comparisons to 'normal' ... a 30-year span of time from 1981 to 2010 is used. WL

Gardeners share special tools

by Mara Dresner
Staff Writer

Anyone who likes to garden knows that you need some basic tools just to get started.

However, Sarah Bailey of UConn Extension in West Hartford said you don't need a shed full of implements to be successful.

"I can do a substantial amount of my routine gardening tasks with two tools: a trowel and my pruners. I have a variety of trowels in convenient locations, but one pair of pruners travels with me everywhere. I have holes in the back pocket of most of my pants and shorts where the pruners have worn through," she said.

Bailey, who serves as state extension master gardener coordinator, Hartford County Master gardener coordinator and youth gardening coordinator, finds many uses for the pruners.

"I use them for cutting twine, trimming small branches and non-woody plant material, snipping off diseased or pest-infested plant tips, and plenty of mundane tasks such as opening plastic packaging of plant ties or hose parts. They are a critical element of hose repair, which seems to be an ongoing process,” she said.

“There are plenty of very good pruners available, but my longtime partner is a pair of Felco #7 pruners. ... They are not cheap, but they last forever. I have had my pair for over 20 years and they’re still going strong.”

The feel of a tool is important even for someone who grows plants professionally, such as Brenda Sullivan of Thompson Street Farm in Glastonbury.

“Hand garden tools can take on a personal attachment for gardeners with their size, weight and handle type being key individual factors. Even a veteran gardener like myself can become frustrated with an excessively heavy, bulky or otherwise inefficient tool,” she noted.

“Sometimes a gardener must think outside the box and adapt a tool from someplace else as I did with my most prized garden tool: an old masonry trowel.

“This beautiful tool from the early part of the 20th century was left to me by Uncle Larry who inherited it from his father after he died in the 1930s. To my surprise, the worn handle from decades of use is the perfect size for my hand, and the trowel is well-balanced and not too heavy even after hours of use. This is important because during the growing season, I prepare 50-plus micro-green trays a week so the use of a heavy hand tool fatigues my hand and wrist,” she continued. “I also love this trowel for its tapered end that fits perfectly in the corners of the tray allowing for even soil distribution as well as for its efficiency as a transplanting tool in the garden.”

Cheryl DePrest of Wethersfield, founder of Olga Bobbi skincare products, also has a favorite in her garden. In her case, however, her favorite is a “who” and not a “what”: her husband Bruce DePrest, chief meteorologist at Channel 3.

“Bruce and I love to garden and this is a project that we enjoy together. We have a perennial garden and an organic herb/vegetable garden every year. Our herb garden is always the same. Parsley, basil, sage, thyme, oregano, tarragon, lemon verbena and rosemary are a must,” Cheryl DePrest said. “This year our vegetable garden will consist of many varieties of green beans; a variety of peppers, including habanero, Bruce’s favorite; cucumbers; and several kinds of cherry tomatoes – we like them sweet.”

They grow everything organically, and Cheryl uses the lemon verbena, rosemary and cucumbers in soaps for her Olga Bobbi line.

“Bruce loves making his yummy marinara sauce with fresh basil and oregano,” Cheryl shared. “Last year we had so much basil that I was able to make 10 batches of pesto, some of which we froze for the winter. This is a family favorite.” WL

Living Spaces

Effortlessly chic

The absence of color is all the rage in home decorating

White is a versatile color in home decorating and renovation. White helps any space look effortlessly chic, blends well with just about any color and can be incorporated into various design styles — from modern to traditional.

While the color white is always trendy, the paint manufacturers Benjamin Moore chose white (Simply White OC-117) as its “it” color for 2016. White can be used nearly anywhere inside and outside the home. Improving interior and exterior spaces with white elements is easier than you might think, and it instantly can make anything look as good as new.

Kitchen

While rich cherrywood cabinets and deeply hued granite countertops have long been popular in kitchens, creamy white cabinets paired with blonde wood countertops can work together to make kitchens seem open and airy. If all white is not your thing, brighten up kitchen spaces with white canisters, cookie jars and a fresh bouquet of white flowers to add instant appeal.

Living Room

Use white as a base color for living room spaces so you can build on it with other hues on pillows and draperies, mixing and matching however you see fit.

Homeowners who have children and/or pets should look for furniture with removable slipcovers. This way they're easily removed and laundered.

Bathroom

White bathrooms look fresh and are easy to clean and maintain. White tiles provide a classic look. Include colored bath mats, towels and shower curtains to break up the white as you see fit. A neutral white base makes it easy to switch out color schemes whenever you feel like it.

Bedroom

Feminine and fresh, white bedrooms may not be the first choice for novice designers. If the prospect of white on white seems too sterile, offset deeper hues on bed linens and walls with white furniture. This provides some pop against the darker contrast. Keep in mind that doing a bed up in all white means it will always be easy to find matching sheets and pillowcases, making it possible to ensure everything looks cohesive and crisp.

Outdoors

Use white paint on trims, shutters, mailboxes and more to provide that pop of contrast against the rest of the home.

White complements just about every color, making it a versatile choice on a home's accents regardless of the main exterior color of that home.

White and other light shades will reflect the sun as well, contributing to cooler temperatures on walkways, decks and other structures, which can be advantageous to homeowners who live in warm climates.

Is it any wonder that white continues to be a classic and popular color to use around the home?

Whether you do so with monochromatic rooms or accent pieces, you can incorporate white into design plans throughout your home. WL

Sprucing up town spaces for spring

by Sloan Brewster
Senior Staff Writer

Elmwood business owners purchased 61 planters for the town of West Hartford last spring.

As spring blooms, local volunteers gear up to plant flowers and beautify their towns.

In most towns, May is the month when blossoms are planted in garden plots throughout town centers and in containers, such as window boxes and flower pots, adorning walkways and islands on busy streets.

These arrangements, beautiful as they are, do not appear by magic aided by flower fairies. Rather, volunteers from garden clubs and beautification organizations take on the tasks of making and caring for the plantings.

The Garden Club of Avon has been doing spring plantings at the Town Hall complex and in the center of town for many, many years, said

Jan Brigham.

"It's one of our biggest projects that we do," she said.

Members of the club's Civic Committee go to the Pickin' Patch where they choose flowers for the window boxes at Town Hall and the garden patches in the complex, Brigham said. There are about four different varieties in each box.

The flowers, which are put in in May just before Memorial Day and removed in October, are changed from year to year.

Last year, they included variegated geraniums, which have different color levels and stand out prettily against the brick walls, said Ann Clark, Civic Committee co-chair. Superbells were also in the mix.

"[They come in] a variety of colors, white, yellow, red, purple," she said. "They go from a deep red to a medium red even into the pink family, and those are really low maintenance and they can sort of droop over the window box."

In the garden plots, they planted lantana, astilbe and begonias, which are tolerant of the large amounts of shade in the area and don't require a great deal of sunlight.

"We did different colors. We did white, we did yellow and we did red," Clark said.

In past years, they have planted thyme and sweet potato vines, which also vary in color from green to dark red, Clark said. When volunteers pull the plants up, there are actually sweet potatoes in the ground.

At the Memorial Garden on the Town Green, they chose patriotic arrangements.

"We did red, white and blue," Clark said. "Red geraniums, white petunias and blue ageratum."

Flowers are placed so that the tallest ones are in the back and the shortest in the front, with those of mid-height in between the rows of taller and shorter flowers, Brigham said.

The work isn't over when the plants are put in either. For about the next six months, volunteers care for and maintain the plants, making schedules to water, weed and remove the dead flower heads. How much they do depends on weather conditions

"It all depends. The weather is our big problem," Clark said.

Brigham, who is 84, has been gardening for 50 years and has been in the club since 1981.

"I think it's just being outdoors and watching your flower garden flourish," she said of why she enjoys it.

In Wethersfield, the Wethersfield Beautification Trust has been doing the plantings for more than 20 years, according to Maragaret Sacks, who is known as the Queen of the Gardens.

The trust, which is a registered non-profit, was started in 1996 by Sey and Carol Adil, during plans for a big town celebration, Sacks said. At a Town Council meeting, it was decided that the town should be spruced up during the affair and the Adils took on the task.

Since then the trust has evolved, in part due to a smaller contingency of volunteers.

"As with many of these things, they start out wider and then contract a bit," Sacks said. "It's harder to get volunteers."

Volunteers from the trust plant and maintain 60 cement planters in the historical areas of town in Old Wethersfield and the business district, on the Silus Deane Highway as well as 23 garden plots in parks and other key spots.

Like in Avon, the planters are planted in May and pulled out in October.

Volunteers get together on the third Saturday in May, said Marguerite Alpert, garden club member.

"We call it Plant Distribution Day," she said. "Essentially, we have all the volunteers come and pick up all the plants"

Then they disperse, taking the plants, containers, mulch and whatever else they need for the task ahead.

Alpers creates the designs, assuring that all the plantings look more or less uniform.

They include colorful annuals and perennials and grasses with beautiful seed heads that can survive through the cooler days of spring and fall and the hot months of summer.

"Whatever looks good in the containers," she said. "They have to be plants who pass muster as far as being kind of tough."

Some of the blossoms, which they get from Fair Weather Acres in Rocky Hill, include canna lilies, lantana and trailing portulaca flowers and other flowers that are tolerant of bright sunlit areas.

The gardens are designed by the volunteers that plant them, according to Sacks.

"There's quite a bit of variety depending on the volunteers. Some of them are professional gardeners," she said. "They all look lovely, but they're all quite different."

Last year, Sacks and another volunteer had to make some tweaks to a plot on the island at the intersection of Main and Marsh streets after the town completed some roadwork and turned the intersection into a four-way stop.

"It impinged on the garden area that we had done for years," Sacks said. "So we went out there on a day in spring and dug out some of the rosebushes."

They replanted the bushes to another spot on the island and took out some plants and put in others.

Alpert joined the trust when she was pregnant with her first son, who is now in college.

"When my kids were very young, that was the civic thing we did," she said of plantings they maintained in Old Wethersfield Village. "We would go there and water and take care of the flowers and make sure everything looked nice."

Last year, Charlie Hilborn, owner of Sheehan-Hilborn-Breen Funeral Home in Elmwood and active member of the Elmwood Business Association, took on the mission of beautifying the neighborhood.

Through KNOX of Hartford, Elmwood business owners purchased 61 planters for the town of West Hartford. According to its website, KNOX was started by Hartford councilwoman Betty Knox in 1966 when she established a trust fund to help improve the city. Now KNOX coordinates a variety of greening programs, including a Community Gardening Program and Blooms Planters.

Blooms Planters is a program to beautify storefronts or businesses with planters.

In Hartford, each year, crews from KNOX prepare 300 planters with flowering annuals and centerpieces for citywide beautification, the website reads. The program is coordinated in partnership with volunteers and the Hartford Business Improvement District.

The program works in conjunction with business owners who pay $180 per planter, which covers the planter, its upkeep throughout the season and its later removal.

Since the program was such a success last year, Hilborn is planning to do it again this year.

"I've already spoken to the Knox Foundation. They will be very happy to work with us this year," he said. "I'm hoping to get at least 60 out here this year."

KNOX will start its growing season in April, he said on Friday, March 17. Last April, he toured the greenhouse.

"At that point they were gorgeous," he said.

This year, business owners from the Design District New Park Avenue and Bishops Corner areas of town are also planning to work with KNOX to get some planters in their areas, Hilborn said. The Park Road Association also wants to join the effort.

"To quote my phrase, 'Elmwood is blooming,'" he said. "Well, the whole town should be blooming."

KNOX puts the planters in in mid-June and removes them in October, unless business owners want them switched to chrysanthemums, which are maintained through November. WL

Harmful and helpful insects in the garden

Although it's virtually impossible to count them, insects are the most diverse group of organisms on the planet. At any given time, it is estimated that there are around 10 quintillion individual insects living. Gardeners grow frustrated when seeing their gardens infested with insects, but gardeners would be wise to learn which insects are hurting their gardens and which can actually help gardens in the long run before eradicating them.

Harmful

Aphids: These insects suck on the juice needed to sustain plants, particularly when they congregate.

Bald-faced hornet: Hornets tend to be an aggressive species that can sting repeatedly. Should you find a nest near an entertaining space or garden, it can cause trouble.

Carpenter ants: These ants will burrow into wood causing damage. They may compromise any wooden structure in and around a home.

Locusts: Various species of locust can damage plants and crops due to their voracious appetites.

Treehoppers: These small, green insects mimic the look of leaves, and their appetites can affect crops and gardens.

Red pavement ant: As they feed on all manner of human food, these ants can quickly overtake areas with their staggering numbers and deliver painful bites.

Grasshoppers: Certain grasshoppers, like the red-legged grasshopper, can decimate food crops and transfer parasites to birds when eaten as prey.

Caterpillars: Many caterpillars, the precursor to adult moths, will feed constantly on leaves, stems and other parts of plants.

Helpful

Antlion: A foe of ants, they'll help eat and control ant populations and pollinate flowers. They pose no threat to humans, either.

Big dipper firefly: These colorful insects feast on earthworms, slugs and snails during the larval stage.

Garden spiders: Although some spiders can be venomous, many are handy to have around the garden. They'll help control pest populations that can damage plants and crops.

Dragonflies: These arial artists that zip around the yard are consuming smaller insects that would otherwise pester plants and humans.

Blue-winged wasp: This wasp attacks the larvae of Japanese beetles, helping to control beetle populations.

Bees and butterflies: Butterflies and bees are some of the best pollinators and add whimsy to gardens. WL
